How to Use English Punctuation Correctly

End your sentences with a period, question mark, or exclamation point.

Use the period to denote the end of a statement. The period ( . ) is one of the most commonly used punctuation marks.

The accessibility of the computer has increased tremendously over the past several years.

The accessibility of the computer has increased tremendously over the past several years.

The question mark (?), used at the end of a sentence, suggests an interrogatory remark or inquiry.

What has humanity done about the growing concern of global warming?

What has humanity done about the growing concern of global warming?

The exclamation point ( ! ) suggests excitement or emphasis in a sentence.

I can’t believe how difficult the exam was!

I can’t believe how difficult the exam was!

Use the double quotation mark and apostrophe for different purposes.

The double quotation ( ” ) encloses a direct quotation, whether made by a person or taken from a piece of literature.

"I can’t wait to see him perform!” John exclaimed.

"I can’t wait to see him perform!” John exclaimed.

According to the article, the value of the dollar in developing nations is “strongly influenced by its aesthetic value, rather than its face value.”

According to the article, the value of the dollar in developing nations is “strongly influenced by its aesthetic value, rather than its face value.”

The apostrophe ( ’ ) has a variety of uses.

The apostrophe ( ’ ) has a variety of uses.

Use the apostrophe together with the letter s to indicate possession. Be aware of the difference in using an apostrophe with singular or plural nouns. A singular noun will use ‘s, whereas the plural version of that singular noun will use s’. Also, be mindful of nouns that are always considered to be plural, such as children and people — here, you should use 's.

Be aware of pronouns that are already possessive and do not require apostrophes, such as hers and its (it’s is used only for the contractions of it is and it has). Their is possessive without apostrophe or s.

The hamster’s water tube needs to be refilled.

A singular noun with possession.

In the pet store, the hamsters' bedding needed to be changed.

A pluralized singular noun with possession.

These children’s test scores are the highest in the nation.

A plural noun with possession.

Friends of hers explained it's her idea, not theirs, to refill the hamster's water tube and change its bedding.

Possessive pronouns (hers, theirs, its), contraction of it is, and a singular noun with possession.

Use the apostrophe to combine two words to make a contraction. For example, cannot becomes can’t, you are becomes you’re, and they have becomes they’ve. Be sure to use correctly possessive pronoun your and contraction you’re — it is one of the __most common mistakes__ to confuse them!

Use the apostrophe within a regular quotation to indicate a quotation within a quotation.

Ali said, “Anna told me, ‘I wasn’t sure if you wanted to come!’”
Note that an apostrophe is not used with s to make a plural noun from a singular. This is a very common mistake and should be avoided.

CORRECT - apple → apples

INCORRECT - apple → apple's

Indicate a break or pause within a sentence with the comma (,).

This is another commonly used punctuation mark. There are several instances where you might use a comma.

Use the comma when there is a break within a sentence that adds information to the subject.

 Bill Gates, CEO of Microsoft, is the developer of the operating system known as Windows.

Use the comma when denoting a series. This is a set of three or more "list" items within a sentence. Many writers omit the last comma as "and" is also a connective ("The basket contained apples, bananas and oranges.").

 The fruit basket contained apples, bananas, and oranges.

 The computer store was filled with video games, computer hardware and other electronic paraphernalia.

Use a comma if your subject has two or more adjectives describing it. This is somewhat similar to a series, except that it is incorrect to place a comma after the final adjective.

CORRECT - The powerful, resonating sound caught our attention.

INCORRECT - The powerful, resonating, sound caught our attention.

Use a comma when referring to a city and state. It is also necessary to use a comma to separate the city and state from the rest of the sentence.

 I am originally from Vernal, UT.

 Los Angeles, CA, is one of the largest cities in the United States.

Use a comma to separate an introductory phrase from the rest of the sentence. An introductory phrase briefly introduces the sentence, but is not part of the sentence's subject.

 After the show, John and I went out to dinner.

 On the back of my couch, my cat's claws have slowly been carving a large hole.

Use the comma to separate two independent clauses. Having two independent clauses in a sentence simply means that you can split the sentence into two. If your sentence contains two independent clauses that are separated by a conjunction (such as and, as, but, for, nor, so, or yet), place a comma before the conjunction.

 Ryan went to the beach yesterday, but he forgot his sunscreen.

 Water bills usually rise during the summer, as people are thirstier during hot and humid days.

Use a comma when making a direct address. When calling one's attention by name, separate the person's name and the rest of the statement with a comma. Note that this kind of comma is used rarely in writing, because this is something that we do normally while speaking.

 Amber, could you come here for a moment?

Use a comma to separate direct quotations. A comma should come after the last word before a quotation that is being introduced. It is not necessary to use a comma in an indirect quote. A comma is usually not necessary if you are not quoting an entire statement.

A direct quotation.

While I was at his house, John asked, “Do you want anything to eat?”

An indirect quotation that does not require a comma.

According to the client, the lawyer was "lazy and incompetent."

How to Use Grammar Correctly

GOOD vs. WELL

In casual speech, we frequently have to choose between the adjective good and the adverb well. When modifying a verb, use the adverb well.

He swims well.

He knows only too well who the murderer is.

When using a verb that has to do with the five senses, you want to use the adjective instead.

How are you? I’m feeling good, thank you.

After a bath, the baby smells so good.

Even after my careful paint job, this room doesn’t look good.

LESS vs. FEWER

When talking about countable things, we use the word fewer. When talking about measureable quantities that we cannot count, we use the word less.

She had fewer chores, but she also had less energy.

ME, MYSELF AND I

An easy way to determine whether you should refer to yourself is to just take the other person out of the sentence.

“Steve and I went to the store.”

If you remove Steve, you now have a choice between “Me went to the store,” “Myself went to the store,” or “I went to the store.”

Use the pronoun “me” when you are the direct object of the sentence. In other words, someone else will perform the action to, or for, you. For example, “me” is the direct object of the sentence

“If you have concerns, please call Greg or me.”

In this case, you are asking someone to call you, so they are performing an action to you. If this is difficult to determine, just remove Greg from the sentence. Without Greg in the sentence, it feels very natural to use “me.”

No one other than you can do anything to yourself.

Here are some examples:

I want to drive myself today.

I’ll clean the house myself.
I bought dinner for Grace and myself.

If you are confused by the introduction of another person, remove Grace from the sentence and you will see that “myself” is correct.

WHO vs. WHOM

“WHOM” is used when it is the object. It often follows the word, “to”, “with”, “for” Whom is receiving action. An easy way to remember also is by trying to answer the question with either HE or HIM. If it is HE, use WHO. If it is HIM, use WHOM. You can remember because both HIM and WHOM end with the letter M.

How to Use Types of Sentences Correctly

The subject of a sentence identifies who or what the sentence is about. Like a sentence itself, a subject can be simple, consisting of a noun or pronoun, or complex, consisting of a noun or pronoun with additional modifiers. The rules below will help you identify the subject of a sentence whether simple or complex.

Rule 1: To locate any subject in a sentence, ask who or what, insert the verb, and finish the question.

The children enjoy playing different sports.

Question: Who or what enjoys playing different sports?

Answer/Simple Subject: Children

Rule 2: Complex subjects are nouns or pronouns with additional modifiers that further clarify the subject. To identify complex subjects, use the same process as explained in rule one.

The children who were late to school were playing soccer.

Question: Who or what were playing soccer?

Answer/Complex Subject: The children who were late to school.

Rule 3: Compound subjects have two simple subjects that are joined by a coordinating conjunction: or or and. Use the same sample question procedure to identify the compound subject.

The table and chairs were moved to the new classroom.

Question: Who or what were moved to the new classroom?

Answer/Compound Subject: The table and chairs.

Rule 4: Compound-Complex subjects have two simple subjects with additional modifiers that further clarify the subjects. Use the same question procedure to identify compound-complex subjects.

The table and chairs that remained in the old classroom were moved to the new classroom.

Question: Who or what were moved to the new classroom?

Answer/Compound-Complex Subject: The table and chairs that remained in the old classroom.
